

WITH CASUAL REMARKS REGARDING THE ASTOR FAMILY AND ASTORIA.

A Few Suggestions for the Benefit of the Salvation Army and Tause Liable to Re-Hit with a Rodak Camera-An Indian (Copyright, 1993, by E. W. Nucl.

Astoria sits entbroaed at the mouth of the mighty Columbia. She is a good town and reminds me some of Heidel-We played there against the Salvation Army and Smith's Idle Beans. The Salvation Army on the coast this spring is doing rather a rocky business. They are mostly carrying on a guerrilla warfare in their business. They seem to be on neutral ground, giving most of their attention to supplies. Instead of doing a general, devil defying street act and trying to scare old Entan by means of a tambourine and two homely women. why don't they take in washing occasionally, including their own?

PLAYING AGAINST SALVATIONISTS.

When they know the great adversary souls as you as I do they will not fry scare him with cross eved wemen or tumbourine, the sachbut and the landled. But I was sp. king of Astoria, I wight a perpendicular lot there, with pokets in it and brackets for holding tarn implements. Associa was settled in $11 by Mr. Astor, whose family are sail to boy of names. His descend-Nyel are quite thick. They often bortow dishes of us when they have company a me to architecte on them. While our am stors were catching whales, the Astors were catching "mushrats." The elder Astor was prospered, however, more than the elder Nyes, for when petroleum began to squirt through the ground our folks had to hire out to Capt. The canned sal- you dumb non is caught all along here, and the low sob of the steamer echces back from the rich green velvely moss which upholsters the high steep bunks, while ever and anon the wall of the sawmill calls forth the sympathetic tears of the highly saturated say, and the beautiful hills in their fir trimmed garments give back an

I wish I could get a chance to write a message for the president one year, or, still better, prepare the speech would do inc. I presume it would also do everybody else. But it would possess the queen which, if she could memorize it and get some good elecutionist to fix some suitable meatures for it would attract and draw forth comment anyhow.

Instead of giving the long whiskered and rather trite facts about being at peace with the various foreign dynasties that I had married into, I would give a whole lot of bright family gossip such as most come to the car of an old lady in such a position of trust and confidence as she occupies, and I would work in little society notes and a department called "The Man About Town." The annual message of the president, too, is open to criticism. Local hits about Washington would make the document far more juicy and generally read. Instead of going on with six or seven coltunns of nonparell advice and suggestions to congress as to what to do during the coming session. I would hold it down to five lines by saying "Gentlemen, you may go home and do your electioneering if you please, instead of country to Washington to do it. Leave your address with me and I will see that your salaries are sent to you."

The salmon industry is not so profitable now as it used to be. A salmon that used to cost 25 cents now costs $1.25. to the connery, so it is a question with them whether they can can or not. Yet at her. I suppose that after a certain manner, a Man might do well in a salimon cannery.

All styles of business, however, on the river and Sound seem to be doing well. If we do not mention the canteries, there are the pineries, tanneries, fisheries, eareries, drinkeries and town lotteries. I do not know how the real estate men in Astoria are, but certainly their lots, many of them at least, lead an upright

I just heard of a young man in Portland who came up with us on the steamer California along with other things. He bragged a good deal in social circles after he got home about how good a sailor he was, and made onite a hero of himself. He made fun of his fellow passengers a great deal, and proceeded to be the life of the party. After awhile a young lady in the group began to look over some photographs and stereoscopic views. A curious feature of the shore along the banks of the Columbia is the wood lume. It is a long trough cut V shape and supported by high poles, making a ong schute, sometimes extending for miles up the inaccessible hills and topping the almost inexhaustible pine woods which cover the bluffs. Eight or ten oches of water will do the work of a hundred teams in scooting the fire wood lown these hills, and in fact in most places wagons could not be used at all. It is a beautiful sight to the tenderfoot. Cords and cords of two and four foot wood come down these flumes to the steamboat landing, wet and surprised, but otherwise in good order.

In Portland I met an actor who had just returned from Alaska. He says that Alaska as yet is not a good show place. He saw the country, however. I asked him how the scenery was and other works of creation. He said they were "very clever." I had never heard the works of God indersed so heartily by an actor before, and so I speak of it here. I do it in order to prove that many of the unkind criticisms we hear relative to the from a feeling of envy and jealousy worthy only of smaller minds. A truly great man will not try to belittle others. No matter whether we are trying to construct solar systems or elevate the American stage, nothing can be gained by the exhibition of a small jealousy.

Do not order broiled systems in Portland, Oregon. Other victuals are reasonsble in price and well prepared, but there is no economy in buying broiled oysters. I maid sixty cents for six broiled oysters, and each one was smaller than a collar outton. On the coast the clam is the Ward McAllister of nautical circles. He grows to an enormous size, and is arrogant to a degree. I saw in San Francisco a clam shell which had been used for years as a horse block—that is, I saw live him and his hosts by beating the a man who said he saw it. His name was Samuel Post Davis, and a letter addressed to him at Carson, Nevada, will call forth a pleased and happy response

At Tacoma I saw several of the Siwash tribe of Indians. I paused to scrutinize them more carefully. Especially a bright young Alfarita squaw with white teeth and black eyes. They had been blacked by her husband, I presume. But she was quite pretty, and therefore a great curiosity among the Siwashes, who are a low, triffing set.

I looked at her earnestly until she came timidly toward me with a large, wet mackerel in one hand and a blood cardling oath in the other. Then I said and live in New 1sts and are among to Mr. Lacy; "We will now go and look pur est people. The Asters and the at these lots of yours, if you are not too busy." He said perhaps that would be the better plan, so we trudged away.

The Chinooks are a more peaceable people, fond of out door sports and Holland gin. Their lives are spent mostly in their canoes, which gives them wonderful depth of chest and a paucity of legs which is quite remarkable. One of them looks very robust as he rows, as he rows, but when on land he goes, with his ten converging toes, it would make you A toria is really a good city and shows | sure to grin at the way his toes turn in On the shore.

I believe in giving every man the right to his own views, even though they may differ from my own.

The Siwash is also a plain spoken person, and knowing that he can never be elected president anyway, he is not afraid to express himself. It must be a pleasant life to lead. You just get up in the morning when you get ready and put on your bed quilt-provided you haven't got it on already-and then you go cheerfully about the duties of the day by sitting down in the glad sunshine. It must be real nice.

THE YOUNG GIRL'S AGE.

Phase of the Girl of the Period. TCopyright, 1890.1

This has been called the children's age. With almost equal force might it be termed the young girl's age, for during the past two decades she has been steadicreation are really unjust, and arise ly growing in importance. What she shall make of herself absorbs the attention of intelligent thinkers far more than does the question of how to dispose of her brother. For her education colleges are founded, for her self support professions are developed-one might almost say, invented-for her protection as a worker, Christian associations, clubs and protective unions are organized. Books are written to teach, to encourage, to direct her, and there are not lacking those who declare that her influence is molding at least one important branch of literature. The effect that the "young person" has upon fiction is a favorite lament with a certain class of writers of the day who deplore that they have to avoid high seasoning that might cause a smart to youthful palates, and to modify their treatment of what they are pleased to style the real side of life.

An editorial writer in a popular magazine recently referred to a late novel that had excited comment by downright dealing with erotic phases, and defended such plainness of speech by the assertion that the average young woman, on whose behalf parents and guardians were indignant with this novelist, was not only familiar with such English classics as Fielding, Smollett and Sterne, but that she had usually perused also translations of the Decameron and the Heptameron, and had a more than casual acquaintance with other works of a similar character.

So far as the writer of this knows, no one has yet taken the pains to contradict so unwarrantable a statement. Their author doubtless believed he was justi fied in making such an allegation; but his association with young girls must have been singularly unfortunate if those he knows have been generally addicted to the class of literature he includes in this category.

There are two popular beliefs current concerning the girl of the period. One holds her to be almost an angel in her innocence and ignorance of evil, a creature whose absolute purity is only equaled by the total lack of perception that and meral unsavoriness.

The other class of theorists concerning girls go to the opposite extreme and impute to them a "knowingness" which verges upon shamelessness. The injustice suggested that he take with him Queen of the latter view is paralleled by the abbeen brought up as was the Sleeping years of age, and no longer cursed by the | rank fool, she cannot escape the knowlfatal gift of beauty, but she said that her | edge that there is sin in the world. | Yet sence she certainly would not consent to | bad and how mad it is" does not detract without being contaminated by it outnot or will not own the existence of wickedness. Every one who has had an extended acquaintance with girls knows that there are as wide variances in their characters as in those of men. Minds clean and minds unclean are found among both. There are women in whose presence the most daring would hesitate to repeat a salacious tale or allusion, and others with whom one feels that "a "shady story, if cleverly told, would be greeted with applause. But be it said, to the credit of womankind at large, that the latter are the rare exceptions-never the

The moment the words had passed my lips their true significance burst upon m=, and I would have given worlds to recall them. I shall never forget the shocked silence that settled down over the group, who ad innocently construed my qualification of 'awful' to mean simply 'droll.
